Q: jQuery - Weird keyboard and cursor behaviour on html forms Have a weird behaviour on a web form. When the user is focusing on a textbox, a mouse click makes the cursor blink (doesn't move). The whole keyboard is unresponsive. When the user presses a key, the cursor instantly moves to the first character of the input and the key is correctly mapped. It's not the same with the space bar. I know the behaviour is the same for any input, but I think the form (used to be "removable content" of the site) is triggering the same behaviour with any elements not in the form. The users say they don't use any addon or extension. The site uses Bootstrap and I'm not sure the theme is special. I'm using this jQuery function to prevent the event: $(document).on('keydown', function(e) { if (e.which === 37) { e.preventDefault(); } }); I tried to turn on/off the plugin again but nothing change. I'm using Firefox. Is this a known issue with the browser? The most annoying thing is that it is only happens for a few seconds and then the whole keyboard and cursor works normally.
