In most cases you can skip this step. If you want to specify an alternate key pair, enter it in the Server Authentication dialog box. For the Mac Server Software update, the system automatically checks whether a newer version of the software is available; if a newer version is available, the system updates the Software Installer Software is necessary to install. For Mac OS X 10.8 and later, the system automatically checks whether a newer version of the software is available. The update takes about 10 minutes. If you do not have a Client Authentication certificate, you will be prompted for it. If you are deploying the Mac Server App Server. Click Install. The Mac OS X Server App stores the Certificate and Key pair in the Server keychain, so you should be able to continue right from here without the need for a reboot. You can choose to download or use an existing configuration file. If you choose the Download Configuration File option, the system creates a.p12 file containing the certificate and private key in PEM format. If you choose to use an existing configuration file, enter the name of the file in the dialog box, and click Continue. If you are prompted to create a key pair, enter the key pair name in the dialog box, and click Continue. You can also choose to generate a new key pair. The default key pair name is "Server Key Pair", and the default location is in the User keychain. If you have an existing key pair named "Server Key Pair", you will be prompted to use it. If you choose to generate a new key pair, select the certificate and key you want to use, and the key pair name you want to use, and then click Create. If you choose to use an existing certificate and key pair, enter the name of the existing certificate and key pair in the dialog box, and then click Continue. Click Install to complete the install. The system copies the certificate and key pair into the Server keychain. If you are prompted to download an existing configuration file, enter the name of the file in the dialog box, and then click Continue. If you choose to download an existing configuration file, enter the name of the file in the dialog box, and then click Continue. To connect a Mac Server, just use the Server Keychain Access app on your Mac (located in the Applications directory) to access the certificate and key pairs.
